

Award in Education and Training

One to one, live online delivery for busy professionals

Who is it for?

The Level 3 Award in Education and Training (RQF) is an introductory, knowledge-based teaching qualification which can be undertaken by individuals who are not yet in a teaching role (pre-service) or are currently teaching (in-service).

How is it delivered?

The course is made up of three units.

Unit One

Understanding roles, responsibilities and relationships in education and training

Unit Two

Understanding and using inclusive learning and teaching approaches in education and training

Unit Three

Understanding assessment in education and training.

The qualification is delivered by a programme coach, live online, where learners will obtain the knowledge, research skills, and reading needed to complete each assignment. Resources have been designed to take learners through each step of the programme in a logical way.

The qualification is assessed through a portfolio of evidence which demonstrates the learner has met the required assessment criteria. The learner is required to prove both their theoretical and practical knowledge within their portfolio of evidence and undertake a live-streamed teaching session as part of the programme.

Entry requirements

Learners must be at least 19 years of age at certification. There are no specific entry requirements and learners do not need to have current teaching practice hours to achieve the qualification.
